It was 6.00 am when Neil Hughes and wife Carol, keen birders from the UK, were ready to start the walk into the Central Catchment Nature Reserve. The overnight rain had made the trails muddy and wet and added to the challenge posed by the rocky and undulating terrain. We heard a distant Sunda Scops Owl and an even further Brown Hawk Owl as we stumbled in the semi-darkness. At one spot, we managed to get close to two calling Brown Hawk Owls and eventually saw one perched high on a snag. Almost at the same time, we saw a Large-tailed Nightjar skim the treetops. Our first birds and it was still not yet dawn!

We climbed Jelutong Tower and then waited for dawn. The dimly lit forest was alive with bird calls. We spent over two hours scanning for birds and were rewarded with close up views of bulbuls, leafbirds, flowerpeckers and sunbirds as well as fly-by parakeets, green pigeons and swiftlets. We finished the morning with 44 bird species as well as other fascinating wildlife such as Long-tailed Macaque, Slender and Plantain Squirrels, Asian Toad and Malesian Frog.

Next, we headed for traditional Singapore breakfast of kaya butter toast with hot coffee and tea at a coffee shop. The humidity was rising and it was good to rest in the air-conditioned place. Dairy Farm Nature Park was next and we spent a quick half hour searching for more birds. However, it was depressingly quiet and we decided to cut short our visit.

News of the presence of a Band-bellied Crake at the Singapore Botanic Gardens had the local birders going crazy and we decided to try for it. The Band-bellied Crake is a vagrant in Singapore and this would only be the second record. Furthermore, it was scarce throughout its range and would stir even the laziest birder into action.

We got there in 20 minutes and were soon standing with the crowd of mostly bird photographers waiting impatiently for the crake to show. It was hiding in one stand of heliconias and was determined not to come out despite being surrounded. We waited an hour and managed to get tickable views of the lone bird. On our way out, we bumped into a family of Red-legged Crakes. Unlike the Band-bellied Crake, these birds were unafraid of people and everyone in the vicinity got good looks and photographs.

It was 1.30 pm when we decided to stop for a quick lunch and then a trip to Sungei Buloh Wetland Reserve. This was our last stop and we spent quite a bit of time exploring the mangroves and ponds. Waders such as Whimbrel, Common Redshank, Common Redshank and Common Sandpiper were present in the exposed ponds together with egrets and some escaped storks. At the river, we also saw water monitors, some roosting Common Fruit Bats and a small Estuarine Crocodile. Raptors included White-bellied Sea Eagle, Brahminy Kite and a Western Osprey.

We ended our first day of birding in Singapore with 67 species.

Day 2 started with breakfast in a dumpling shop in Changi Village amidst an awakening dawn chorus. We saw Tanimbar Corella, Red-breasted Parakeet, Collared Kingfisher and Oriental Pied Hornbills before our first sip of coffee!

At 8.00 am, we boarded the ferry to Pulau Ubin only to encounter a period of light rain. Luckily the rain stopped and we were able to get to the eastern coast of the island for more birding. It was very cloudy when we got to the Chek Jawa Wetlands. One of our first birds was the globally endangered Straw-headed Bulbul. We heard its melodious song and were able to see a pair easily at the mangrove boardwalk. After being treated to this spectacle, we walked to the Coastal Boardwalk where our next target, Great-billed Heron, was feeding in the rapidly rising waters. Raptors were also evident and we saw Brahminy Kite, White-bellied Sea Eagle and a pale morph Changeable Hawk Eagle in the blue sky above us. We also saw some roosting Whimbrel and Greater Crested Tern, Common Kingfisher and Red-rumped Swallow. On the way out, we spotted a female White-rumped Shama and the “friendly” Wild Pig.

At 12.30 pm, we said goodbye to Pulau Ubin, having recorded 40 species of birds in all.

We had a relaxed lunch at Changi Village and then we headed for Pasir Ris Park. Our main targets here were the two big owls but I was careful not to raise hopes in case they were not at their roosts. Luck was on our side and we were successful in seeing both Spotted Wood Owl and Buffy Fish Owl. The former took some neck breaking scans of the tall mahogany trees while the latter required some skill in seeing through low vegetation in the mangroves. We also had the bonus of seeing the exotic Chestnut-winged Cuckoo as it flitted through some open vegetation.

Our final destination was Lorong Halus Wetland and we got there at 4.00 pm. The sky was by now rather gloomy and we did not expect to see a lot. However, a flock of Sooty-headed Bulbuls and a lone Long-tailed Shrike surprised us as we explored the desolate country road near Coney Island. At the reservoir, we saw two Yellow Bitterns and a Common Sandpiper. After about an hour, we retreated but not before seeing a handsome male Chinese Sparrowhawk fly just above us. Wow!

Over the course of two days, we managed to record a respectable total of 106 species of birds plus many other interesting wildlife. The highlights were the owls of course and the shy crane that turned up in the Botanic Gardens.
